Treatment For Tobacco.

Tobacco growers in Kentucky, Tennessee and adjoining States are advised by Government specialists to use arsenate of lead in freeing their crop of hornworms—the greatest pest that the growers in the dark tobacco district have to face. Arsenate of lead is said to be both effective and safer than paris green which has been used extensively against the pests for some years. With it there is no risk of burning the tobacco and this alone, in the opinion of the United States Department of Agriculture, makes its use advisable despite the somewhat increased expense. In addition it appears, unlike Paris green, to have no injurious effect upon the operator.

Until recent years it was customary to pick off the hornworms by hand—"hand worming" as the work was called. As labor grew scarcer and less effective, however, this method became too expensive and growers were compelled to employ an insecticide. Of those first employed, Paris green proved the most satisfactory—or rather the least unsatisfactory, for it frequently causes a considerable loss. In 1912, for example, in several fields in Tennessee it was estimated that the damage done by Paris green ranged from 10 to 25 percent of the gross value of the crop. Exceptional cases are on record where the damage has run as high as 50 per cent. Arsenate of lead causes none of this damage, according to statement in Farmer's Bullington 595, "Arsenate of Lead as an Insecticide Against the Tobacco Hornworms in the Dark-Tobacco Districts," just published by the Department of Agriculture.

On one occasion four per cent of the tobacco was treated with a solution of 54 pounds later only one pound of worms was found in the worms. Weather conditions 2 days contributed to this were extraordinary result. It is not account for the fact that there was no injury to the crop from poison burn. The was well advanced at a stage when Paris-green but is very common.

To secure the best results, arsenate of lead should be used with some form of carrier. A number of experiments indicate that the most satisfactory carrier is finely-sifted, fresh-burned wood ashes of which quantity at least equal to that of the poison should be used. The two should be mixed very thoroughly and be applied when there is no breeze and the dew is still upon the tobacco. A dust gun more powerful than the hand power ones now in general use is requisite if the application is to be even, thorough and therefore effective.

The cost of this treatment depends, of course, upon the condition of the crop. It is estimated, however, that in years when worms are plentiful hand worming costs from $6 to $10 an acre. Paris green will do the same amount of work for not more than $2 an acre and arsenate of lead at a cost of from $3 to $4 an acre. From 3 to 5 pounds of the latter should be used at each application, not including, of course, the weight of the carrier. Since powdered arsenate of lead retails at approximately 25c a pound, the cost of each application will range from 88c to $1.25, or less if the material is purchased in large quantities exclusive of the carrier, labor and other factors. This may seem expensive, but it must be remembered, the bullet-points out, that arsenate of lead recommended not for its cheapness but because it is certain not to injure the tobacco. In some years one application may be sufficient; in others two or even three may be necessary. The number of eggs and young worms that appear on the plants will decide this.
